Bendtner has received a six-game ban for his role in the infamous Copenhagen fire which destroyed his apartment in February and will miss next season's domestic campaign with the north London club. That means Chelsea are free to sign the Denmark international as he prepares for an ankle operation in the new year. But Tottenham have alerted their Premier League rivals they will not welcome the former Arsenal and Sunderland forward back at the Lane. The Blues and Spurs are both looking to bring in a striker during the close season, with Samuel Eto'o on their list of potential new arrivals, and Chelsea would prefer to sign Bendtner than the Cameroon international. Tottenham are not keen on the idea and Chelsea are happy to wait until the summer. Despite reports in Denmark that Chelsea are ready to return for Bendtner, the Blues' stance means they are not in any rush to do so. Chelsea boss Carlo Ancelotti and Tottenham boss Andre Villas-Boas have been alerted by the club's hierarchy that Bendtner would not be welcome back at Stamford Bridge. If Bendtner returns to Spurs, Chelsea will be expected to make compensation
