Unless the Saskatchewan government stops trying to get our public servants to make themselves look like they care more about our province than they do about the headlines they are generating, we will have to witness this large majority Liberal government once again prolong an Ontario-Saskatchewan dispute over the flow of our our resources. The October House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance is expected to be asked again to investigate the dubious use of $100 million in government housing subsidies in both Ontario and

Saskatchewan. Newly sworn in Saskatchewan Premier Scott Moe is fully aware of the standing committee's take on this whole housing subsidy mess and has said his government won't fall for this line of attack again. As the Saskatchewan government recently amended its policy on government-sponsored and subsidized housing, both the province's incoming premier and his government are asking the public to focus on Saskatchewan's initiative to live within its means and set aside $1 billion this year for a "rainy day" fund to deal with a future global, national, provincial or local catastrophe. Story continues below advertisement

The province's newly minted minister of trade, industry and resources, Jeremy Harrison, also noted last month that the government is committed to reviewing the myriad ways in which the province provides assistance to its citizens. As the new government faces questions in the legislature Tuesday about whether the Liberals played politics with the housing subsidy in Saskatchewan, the federal government is taking steps to shift the focus back to the Canadian housing market. The government may soon have to add yet another ministerial portfolio, as federal Finance Minister Bill Morneau has plans to create a new housing, community and rural affairs ministry as one of his first actions as Prime Minister. Rather than wasting precious time and energy explaining that Ottawa has no jurisdiction over housing policy in this province, Mr. Morneau is taking a page from Quebec's new Liberal government in Quebec City. The Quebec government of François Legault has already created a housing ministry and announced plans to force landlords to repair rundown buildings rather than allow tenants to skip rent payments. "This is an urgent and unprecedented situation," Quebec Finance Minister Éric Hérault said when he announced the government's move in
