A: you are really looking the wrong way. You want to try to generate a key for your own OS. The reason why you can't do so is because any key you generate for other OS will be detected by Antivirus software. Once you get the key you want, then you should use it for your OS, and that's it. Now, you're saying you want to generate a key for that software, and then install it on your machine. That's not generating a key for yourself, but for someone else. It's completely different. That's why you get so confused. You need to try installing your software on a different OS and see if it's actually working there. If it works then you should not need to keygen it. If it doesn't work, then it's time to un-keygen it. The fact that you got the key and worked for some other OS means nothing, as you need to test it for yourself.
