We are often asked how the economic situation and the perceptions of the Euro crisis might affect the market environment. From a fundamental perspective, the global economic environment might play a large role in shaping the direction of equity and bond markets as investor sentiment is typically reflected in the economic data. Should the flow of data be positive, market participants might expect to see a positive demand response to any new fiscal tightening. If instead, the data tells us that the world is slowing, the addition of the fiscal policy uncertainty as reflected in the markets will likely weigh on equity and bond markets. The first round of data in October 2011 was positive across the board as the data pointed to overall stability. For example, the Eurozone data in October pointed to a slowing trend as the French PMI fell to 48.2, down from 47.8 in the prior month and also down from the 50.5 reading that is consistent with an economy on the cusp of contraction. A key metric that was positive was the euro/U.S. dollar exchange rate, which fell to a very low 1.2601 at the end of the month. This was the lowest since the end of November 2008. Indeed, the days of cheap euro/dollar exchange rates are over for now as a protracted Eurozone crisis has now put the euro zone on a collision course with the rest of the global economy. The global economy has already slowed as capital outflows from emerging market economies in response to a rising U.S. dollar and other related trends started around the same time as the Eurozone crisis became more apparent. Similarly, the early November Canadian economic data was generally positive, again pointing to a stable and modestly stronger demand environment. A key datapoint was a solid retail sales data headline with sales at $16.11 billion in November, up from $15.2 billion in October. In addition, the headline Canadian CPI data came in well above the consensus expectation with readings of 1.2% for both core and headline readings. There were also solid readings on housing starts and industrial production, despite the lack of any specific pipelines data for either indicator. This positive data flow triggered a fairly good spot in Canadian bond prices in the coming month. For example, the yield

User Comments (1) At least at Netflix, they will let you watch something even if you have 100's of DVDs & BluRays on your account, so we can assume that their system works similarly, but Netflix is also among the few that offer a library of movies with access to every movie ever made, more than the internet.Fantasy Flight Games Fantasy Flight Games (FFG) is a subsidiary of Wizards of the Coast formed in 2010 to streamline manufacturing of the products designed to make D&D and other popular role-playing games more accessible to gamers. The company generates more than $100 million per year and has over $30 million in cash on hand. History Fantasy Flight Games was formed in 2010 by Wizards of the Coast for the purpose of streamlining the manufacturing and distribution of the products that the company produces (such as the Adventures & Reference series of books and numerous Magic: The Gathering expansions). The company has been described as a "fantasy version of Hasbro" as it, like Hasbro, makes products for children's games that would typically be marketed toward an adult audience. In August 2012, Fantasy Flight Games was relocated to a new building in St. Louis, Missouri, which opened in 2015. Game line Fantasy Flight Games produces a variety of roleplaying games. The company is best known for the Dungeons & Dragons role-playing game.
