BattleTech

BattleTech Released!

It was at the dawn of the Age of the Kerens, with the protagonists of this new epoch battling for the universal rule. to this day, the most powerful weapons and technologies of the "elite" soldiers have known no bounds.... Now, these guards have to protect their positions from the most brutal attackers, causing them to evolve continuously in new and unexpected ways. What is this madness, why are there so many generals meeting in the city so early on a morning? This is none of the rebels' concerns, for they will soon reach their goals once they overran the city of Arcerra. The camp is becoming chaotic, one moment everything is calm, later they encounter wave after wave of rebels. It's a confusing attack which grows more and more overwhelming, but the guards counter-attack very efficiently. Prae Macedo The number 1 of Macdroidz and a pretty active member, designer, and open-source contributor to the Grid2 engine. You can check his other Devlogs here: youtube.com/watch?v=9vitWtTFQhA I've always been an open-source fan, a single command line between me and others able to use and make a change to the source, so I guess it's a mindset that I tried to bring to Grid2 for the Mutate bot. Three years ago I found Grid2 through @doza, an open-source proponent who works with Commons:IRC and RnR. @theaevenskra asked for a game that looked nice, fast to run, and easy to setup through the documentation, and I had no choice but to try it. I managed to make a few things, but never really stood out, until three years later when I found out that a game I made while trying to learn to use Grid2 in parallel with League of Legends for fun had been featured on the front page

Arrow Air Defense-S1 is a third-party tower defense game with an unusual twist. In the game, you are a mercenary who was hired by the military to build a defense for a military base. But the military has already built the defenses and you are building it to avenge them. Arrow Air Defense-S1 is a tower defense game for PC, iPhone and iPad. It was released on iOS and Steam on September 28, 2012. Gameplay: As a mercenary, you are in a hired gun business. You are a weapons expert who designs a variety of deadly weapons for the military. On the other hand, you are working in a corner building your own base. The base was designed by a couple of generals. When they used to work there, the base was working as an assault base. A genius in weapons system was assigned to do the project. All the military technology was destroyed. But, fortunately, he already saved the data that he downloaded into a notebook. Now, you are in this job. You have to build a tower defense. Features: ~ 100+ weapons of varied level and shape ~ Main weapon can be upgraded by leveling ~ Your mercenaries are in the land where there is no barter system. You have to pay cash for the most useful technology. ~ Use multiple mercenaries with different skills to overcome the defenses ~ 4 modes of play: Attack, Defense, Time Attack and Boss Mode. ~ Different sound effects, music, and graphics. ~ Different power-ups such as missiles, explosions, oil and power-ups for your main weapon. ~ Customize your mercenaries' skills, appearance and titles. ~ Save the game and resume from the last saved point ~ Extra Story About Us Arrow Air Defense-S1 is a solo and multiplayer tower defense game for PC, iPad and iPhone. It was released on iOS on September 28, 2012 and on Steam on August 8, 2013. In 2014, Arrow Air Defense-S1 was published on Android devices. It is currently still in development. About This Software The Ministry of Booze is a real-time strategy game, a mix of XCOM and Medieval Warfare. You have to collect resources from a dungeon, which is randomly generated for each game. It is up to you to use those resources to build three different factions: military, scientists and nazis. You can sell the resources to gain funds. The game is in development since January 2012

What's new in UldreVoid:

AND YELLOWBREEDERS. The fine old sport of Yellow-hammer, or the Ring-dove, is little known to 'Respectable Ladies' (whatever they be). But, if they could see the Mountain Fowl or Auks alighting close by, under the shadows of the highest cliffs, there would scarcely be any doubting between the couple and the weakest of our sporting ladies. Neither is there much difficulty in calling the Blackbird and the Thrush to mind. Can they say for certain that the tips of the Whitethroat's bill are clothed? NITIDULUPAT, V.T.C. Now, I am known in this Parish and neighbourhood as occasionally keeping some fine dogs for sale, causing the consumption of middlings to be a prized commodity, therefore I made it known in the foregoing article by which the "Yorkshire post" was much gratified. This is a delivery driver in Washington, D.C. More than 4 million years ago, a tiny population of ape-like mammals scurried along a branch of a river in Spain, reaching for one final bite after thousands of years at the top of the food chain. Among these were bears and wolf-like cats, as well as smaller, stockier relatives of monkeys, such as an armadillo and shrew-like creatures today. The little group was called the “terrestrial mammalian record,” an international paleontological conference held last month in the UK revealed. All were wiped out by some calamity in a geological instant — that event submerged them, perhaps along with the future continents and other life. The weeklong meeting in Hadrian’s Mount in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, was part of the fifth annual Fossil for Freedom excavation project. The groups have found fossils of thousands of species, all carrying tags saying which government organization the fossil came from. “When you dig in a quarry in Europe, you never know what you will find,” said Mike Sallnow, a founding member of the organization. “You’re lucky if you uncover petrified wood. But we can find metal coins and knives and lighters, all that kind of thing, all the way through time.” A fossilized tooth, which turns out to be from an insect — Enter
