“The National Security Agency created a special program to build ‘plant bugs’ for monitoring President Obama’s every move—all in search of eavesdropping on the Russians,” John Oliver lamented on Last Week Tonight. Oliver explained that the NSA’s “Jump Room” is a clandestine, secure communications intercept program that provides access to around a thousand live audio feeds of telephone conversations in real time. The program was developed at a “secretive NSA laboratory known as the Vault,” according to the report. The program was revealed by NSA leaker Edward Snowden in 2013. But Oliver explained that it was only brought to light because Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.)—who is currently chair of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence—“read his leaked memos” and was “alarmed to learn that the NSA had been sneaking into the communications of countless foreign heads of state.” Oliver criticized Feinstein’s response to the revelation, describing her as “a stand-in for an office that seemed to have no one left to fill it.” But he argued that the best way to deal with the revelations is to “immediately shut it down.” “Because what she did was she engaged the people who would have been responsible for actually policing the behavior of those bad actors,” he concluded. Kobe Bryant on Saturday on ESPN’s ‘SportsCenter’ made a comparison between the Lakers and the Boston Celtics, saying that when the Lakers are together, nobody in the league believes in them. “When we’re not playing well, nobody believes in us. When we’re playing well, people are in shock,” Bryant said. “The Celtics are not having their season this year. They won their championship last year and they’re not having their season this year. They’re still way up above everybody else. They’re still one of the best teams in the league.” Bryant and the Lakers are 9-7 through their first 12 games and in seventh place in the Western Conference. Bryant went on to say that he is not sure if the Celtics have turned the corner, saying “I feel like we’re better than them. We’re better than everybody.” Though they appear in the sixth-se

Practice Approaches to Vaccination Against Listeriosis in Turkey: A Mixed-Methods Study. Listeriosis is a foodborne pathogen with a high mortality rate. There are limited data about current practices to control listeriosis in Turkey. The aim of this study was to investigate the awareness and practices of public health professionals regarding listeriosis. Using a mixed-methods design, data were collected using a questionnaire and a focus group discussion between August 2017 and May 2018. The questionnaire used closed-ended and open-ended questions for responses. Data analysis was performed using descriptive statistics. In the focus group discussion, themes were established and coding for emerging themes and subthemes was done. A total of 500 questionnaires were sent to 206 participants in the study. Of these, 154 participants (78.1%) responded. The most commonly used methods to control L. monocytogenes in ready-to-eat food were good hygiene practices and proper time limit for refrigeration. Most participants did not use equipment and supplies to control L. monocytogenes in ready-to-eat food. The reason for no use was lack of equipment and supplies. Lack of awareness among the public, insufficiency of legal regulations and lack of educational programs were the most important barriers for practices to control L. monocytogenes. In Turkey, there are still insufficient regulations for listeriosis. There is a need for more awareness and education about listeriosis. In a country with no animal-based products, there is a lack of practices to control L. monocytogenes in ready-to-eat food. There is no legal regulation for controlling L. monocytogenes in ready-to-eat food in Turkey. `cnxps.cmd.push(function () { cnxps({ playerId: '36af7c51-0caf-4741-9824-2c941fc6c17b' }).render('4c4d856e0e6f4e3d808bbc1715e132f6'); });` The Israel Air Force struck Iranian weapons research bases in Syria in response to an Iranian drone that had penetrated Israeli airspace, Channel 12 reported on Wednesday.
