acquired migraine with associated psychologic stress and hallucinations is described. The case was the first episode in a woman of 91 years of age. The attack had lasted 24 hours and was accompanied by painful distention, acoustic hallucinations, loss of appetite, confusion, trouble walking, and stupor. Her medical history was positive for rheumatic fever and recurrent vasospasm of the cerebrovasculature, the latter now thought to be progressive arteriolosclerosis of the subcortical brain stem. The manifestations of this very rare syndrome resemble those of classical migraine, but a complete resolution occurs shortly after the beginning of the attack. There is no definitive answer to the question of whether the symptoms were produced by psychologic stress or by the physical consequences of vasospasm in an area of the brain that controls sensory pathways.
