for example, the word "i" is a pronoun, and this is an example of a content word. content words are those words that have a specific meaning and are used as adjectives, adverbs, nouns, verbs, prepositions, conjunctions, etc. all nouns are content words, but only nouns can be a part of a sentence. a verb is a content word as well. the resource plans that are predefined for your oracle database enable you to set conditions that are used by oracle to allocate resources to your application. each resource plan directive is processed in the following order of precedence : resource plans that are predefined for oracle databases resource plans that you create for example, when you enable the resource_plan directive for a resource plan, oracle uses the values of a couple of reserved keywords to determine whether to allocate more resources to a consumer group. these reserved keywords are: the allocate keyword denotes that the consumer group for which the directive is applied will receive the same amount of resources as was allocated to the consumer group with the same name in the resource plan that is currently active. the disallow_allocate keyword is typically used to disallow allocating additional resources to a consumer group that is already allocated the maximum amount of resources. you can apply resource plan directives to any oracle schema object, such as a stored procedure, a type, a table, or a view. however, only one plan is currently active. when a plan is active, oracle automatically assigns resources to the consumer group named other_groups. when no plan is active, oracle automatically allocates resources to the consumer group named sys.
