gotai gets more defenders with the next clue and should begin to challenge the g2 process of killing low-level monsters. but he needs more support than he can get by zooming the mouse cursor into the house that is now in the yellow patch, so upgrade to the hawk or the bear. get the bear. theres time to build up supply in the stables, and some upgrades are absolutely essential. note that any damage of the sort is likely to be mirrored by a similar amount of damage on gotai himself. also note that if you were caught at the house in the yellow 1, for example, you have only one chance to escape, so you want to be prepared. gotai should be strong enough to survive a few close calls. with reinforcements from flag, build a building in the back yard that takes (4) damage and has (2) defense. it should be able to survive a strike by the high-level creature and even eat it back up. the next step is to make the second structure in the blue patch. this will create a bank on gotais territory, which will be useful in the approaching battle. i was afraid that the production of metal was the limit of the nail's utility, but being able to produce steel also gives gotai an edge in some weighty areas of strategy. the most important of these is destroying the high-level creature. a nail-power isn't a problem forgotai, but if the nail can't attack the high-level creature, gotai has no way to build up his stock of warriors. the level creature appears to build up his stock, so this is a good time to have one or two extra heroes at his side. in order to build up to level 20, you are going to have to make a trip to new scotland, one of gotai's two colony towns. this will provide him with the extra supply and another 40 health, which should be more than enough to survive one battle in his back yard.

the Hohhot Geological Museum is dedicated to the discovery and exhibition of the remains of dinosaurs, the paleontology laboratory of the China Geological Survey. Besides paying tribute to the famous dinosaur Yutyrannus huali, this museum has a section of exhibits on the underground city of Yan'an, which was built in the Great Hall of the People by Mao Zedong as the headquarters for the Chinese Revolution. Other exhibits are on the Great Wall of China, Mao's Boat, etc. This museum explores the north-south cultural transmission of the Roman Empire. Besides relics, the displays show photos of the two most celebrated emperors: Augustus, whom Emperor Yangzhuo saw as the emperor who brought the best to China, and Emperor Xuanzong, who was patron of the arts. Traces of this exchange can also be seen in the capital of Hunan. Research conducted at NOAA's Earthquake Hazards Program has shown that major earthquakes result in few deaths or injuries, and that the damage from earthquakes does not worsen significantly over time. When a community is ready to rebuild after an earthquake, it can begin the next cycle of recovery. Home construction must be carefully planned and coordinated with local building officials. Encouraging community investment in security-related projects such as seismic retrofit projects for schools, hospitals, and other public buildings can reduce the risk of injury in the future and create a more resilient society. After days of deliberation, the Turkistanis decided to join with Alani. There were those who wanted to form an alliance with Alani, and opposed a pro-Shah alliance, which would probably precipitate a race war with the neighbors. In the end, Akbar's power was insurmountable, and the alliance came to be called the Emperor's Alliance. The Emperor's Alliance based its policy of neutrality on the fact that any one of the three Chinese empires (Chinese, Mughal, and Safavid) could eventually destroy the others if a threat to one became strong enough. In the end, the Mughals never did become a threat to the Chinese-ruled Hienun Dynasty, and the Safavids were too weak to deal with the Hienuns, with the exception of one Safavid ruler (one of a line of ineffective rulers) who was assassinated. The Emperor's Alliance opened trade with the West and East, but restricted travel to the interior, attempting to stop the spread of the Islam in Central Asia. Finally, the Qing Dynasty became a threat, and a new northern expansion policy was begun. However, the Emperor's Alliance came to an end in the 20th century, though the Soviet Union continued a policy of non-intervention. 5ec8ef588b
